

Nicki Nabasny is the associate dean for development and alumni relations at the University of Chicago Harris School of Public Policy. In this capacity she has responsibility for Harris's portion of the University-wide campaign, including annual giving, major and principal gifts, donor stewardship and alumni engagement. She also manages the School's advisory board and staffs the dean for development purposes. Nicki has worked in higher education development for 15 years, beginning as a student caller at her undergraduate institution. She spent eight years at the University of San Francisco; she started overseeing the student phonathon program and writing direct mail pieces, was promoted to major gifts, and then managed the stewardship and discovery teams and staffed two deans. She has a BA and BS from Santa Clara University, a Masters in Nonprofit Administration (MNA) from University of San Francisco, and a doctorate in higher education administration (Ed.D.) from University of San Francisco.
